

Data Protection and Records Policy

Northwind Logistics - Version 4.2

Personal data collected in the course of providing transport services is processed only for the purposes of fulfilling the contract, meeting legal obligations and resolving disputes. It is never sold, and it is never shared with third parties for advertising purposes.

Consignment records containing personal data are retained for six years from the date of delivery, after which they are irreversibly anonymised. Anonymised records are kept indefinitely for statistical analysis.

Any person may request a copy of the data held about them. The company must respond within thirty calendar days. If the request is complex, the period may be extended once by a further sixty days, and the reason for the extension must be explained in writing.

Access to the customer database is restricted to staff whose role requires it. Every access is recorded, and the access log itself is reviewed quarterly by the data protection officer.

A personal data breach must be reported to the supervisory authority within seventy-two hours of the moment the company becomes aware of it. If the breach is likely to result in a high risk to the affected individuals, those individuals must also be informed directly and without undue delay.

Backups are encrypted at rest and stored in a location physically separate from the primary systems. Restoration from backup is tested twice a year, and a restoration test that fails must be repeated within fifteen days.

Staff receive data protection training when they join and every two years thereafter. Completion of the training is a condition of retaining access to systems containing personal data.

Suppliers who process data on behalf of the company sign a processing agreement before any data is transferred. The agreement obliges the supplier to notify the company of any breach within twenty-four hours.